You're invited to:

America is at a unique point in time to bring an end to the toxic legacy of childhood lead poisoning. For far too long, this costly and tragic disease has robbed generations of children of their full potential. We have the critical mass, knowledge and opportunity to change the course of history and address the resulting issues of housing conditions, infrastructure, and racial and economic equity by informing decision makers of what is needed and how to scale what works.

To that end, the Green & Healthy Homes Initiative, Healthy Babies Bright Futures, Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai and the National Center for Healthy Housing have joined forces to convene the National Summit to End Lead Poisoning on December 4 and 5, 2016 in Washington, DC.

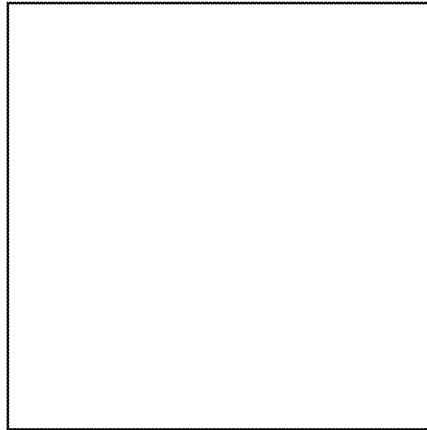

The Summit will bring together 250 leaders, policy makers, strategists and advocates from diverse communities to engage in crafting a blueprint for action and to build the public and political will to end lead poisoning in 5 years.
